Questions for Reflection or Discussion

- Tell about a situation, small or large, in which you personally witnessed someone taking a courageous stand. What was the unjust situation? What courageous action was taken? What role, if any, did you play?
- Read 1 Kings 18:17-40 (one of the most courageous—and bloody!—stands which has ever been taken). List the intellectual, emotional, and behavioral components of Elijah's courage (see Sermon Summary).

Mark the references to "all Israel/all the people" in v. 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 30, 39 and 40.
Now, describe their change throughout the course of this event. What do you observe?

Now read Romans 11:2-4 for another angle on Elijah's situation.

How many godly, faithful Israelites were there during this horrible period of Israel's apostasy?
How many of these godly men and women stood with Elijah against the idolatry?

Now read 1 Kings 18:13 for one final shocking insight! How many other prophets of God existed?
Where were they? What impact were they having amid the idolatry?

With whom do you identify most—Elijah, the 100 true prophets hiding in caves, or the 7,000 rank-and-file Israelites who had not bowed the knee to Baal, yet were fearful to be decisive in their allegiance?

- As a group, choose one aspect of America's moral deterioration which greatly disturbs you.
Outline some of the biblical/intellectual issues which this deterioration violates.
How does this aspect of American moral deterioration injure God and others (rather than yourself)?
What range of behaviors do courageous Christians employ against this moral deterioration?
As a group, decide one action you will take, individually or corporately, to make a courageous stand.
Plan your action. Get pastoral counsel. Pray for courage and God's blessing. Take your action.

Tell your pastors how it went and what happened.

Application-Challenge

Let the Word of God infect your mind and transform your heart and change you so that the Spirit of God galvanizes you to help make a permanent difference in our strategic generation.

Sermon Outline (Key Text: The Book of Esther)

Physical courage motivated first-responders to enter the World Trade Center towers as they burned, but the Scriptures place a premium on moral courage. Moral courage is always the product of spiritual commitment. Esther is the story of faith working through courage. What kind of a person does it take to make an impact in a deteriorating society? The Book of Esther reveals a truly significant thing taking place through ordinary individuals who lived in the midst of extraordinary circumstances. The Book of Esther divides into two parts: it begins with the Jews threatened by danger and ends with them triumphing through deliverance. In the Book of Esther we find three components of courage which God wants to weave into the fabric of your life. There is nothing in our culture that is conducive to the production of this kind of courage. Weak societies do not produce strong leaders.

I. Biblical, moral courage always has an intellectual component. It is not based on ignorance, but on intelligence. In Israelite culture, from the first thing in the morning, to the last thing at night, it was every parent's responsibility to teach their children God's purpose of the nation (Deuteronomy 6:6-7). Esther was both disadvantaged and advantaged as a person: she was an orphan, yet she was biblically trained by her uncle. Like Esther, we cannot determine what we receive, but we can determine how we respond. The only thing we can control is whether or not we will move forward in faith. Esther was disciplined by her uncle, Mordecai. Discipleship is the process of cultivating faith in the life of another. Even as queen, Esther continued to follow the instruction she had received from Mordecai. The truths he taught her became her personal property, and she was driven by them. Some people have rich spiritual heritages, but fail to build upon that privileged position. Others, who've had a disadvantaged past, are at risk of becoming cynical, filled with despair and hopelessness. Esther decided to build on her privileges rather than be buried by her challenges. So, what kind of personal commitments have you made in light of what you have been exposed to?

II. Biblical, moral courage always has an emotional component. You need to be emotionally gripped by the implications of that knowledge. In today's existentialist society, people don't know what to get excited about! They get excited over trivia, and the things of eternity are boring. So, what's the answer to apathy? In order to be motivated enough to do something, you have to be gripped by the true value of life. Mordecai told Esther that God is sovereign, and if she was not willing to get involved and pay the price, God would get the job done through others—but she'd miss her moment (Esther 4:13-14). In the same way, Christ's church will not fail—but there's great danger that you will miss the action, that you will be a spectator, watching it happen, rather than having a piece of the action. The key to life is finding out what God is doing in the world, and getting with it. The value of a life is not determined by its duration, but by its donation. But Esther not only knew the value of life, she also knew the value of death—and there's a cause and effect relationship: she knew that the spiritual is far more important than the material (Esther 4:15-16). She valued the spiritual over the material. How about you? Have you come to appreciate the value of life, and the value of death, from a biblical standpoint? That'll give you moral courage.

III. Biblical, moral courage always has a behavioral component. For both Esther and Mordecai, the key to the life was knowing the responsibility of knowledge—and this is a missing ingredient in the church today. Our minds are full of Bible knowledge—we have a grip on the truth, but the truth doesn't have a grip on us. Biblically speaking, to know and not to do is not to know at all. The Bible was not written to satisfy our curiosity but to transform our lives. People know what they should do, but lack the courage to do it! We don't lack knowledge—we're indifferent. Our knowledge has become non-committal, our knowledge has become consequence-free. It's objective. It's detached. It's impersonal. For a French peasant maid by the name of Joan of Arc, this was not the case. Given the chance to recant, or be burned at the stake, she chose the latter, saying: "I know this now. Every man gives his life for what he believes. Every woman gives her life for what she believes. Sometimes people believe in little or nothing, yet they give their lives to that little or nothing. One life is all we have, and we live it and thus it is gone. But to surrender what you are and live without belief is more terrible than dying, even more terrible than dying young. But there is a worse fate than living without belief, it is to live with a firm commitment to that which at the end of life, at the portals of eternity, turns out to have betrayed you."

When you come to the end of your life and have nothing to look forward to except death, and nothing to look back upon except memories, what will it take to give you the confidence that you lived a life of significance ... that you made an impact on your generation, even though it was a deteriorating one? Esther knew the will of God fully, who felt the will of God deeply and who practiced the will of God consistently. Will you?
